THE BLUE GRASS REGION .- We are sorry to say that the men of this rich and beautiful region of Kentucky have not rallied as they should rally to the defence of the Commonwealth. It is true, however, and regard for the public interest compels us to say it.

No other region of the State is more deeply concerned than the Bluo Grass region in the prompt expulsion of the invader, for, if the invader should advance, no other region would afford him a more tempting field for spoliation. Perhaps no o h r region is so deep 'y concerned in the expulsion of the invader. The Garden of K ntucky, as the B'ue Grass region has been aptly called, is unquestionably the region of all others which the insader longs to possess, and which, if be ever should possess it, he would plunder with a rapacity that nothing short of absolute exhausti in could elake. The possession of the Blue Grass region is und ubtedly one of the gracial objects of the inveder. He looks with an eagerness which only starvation can inspire to that most fertile and wealthy disrict of the Commonwealth as the source of his winter enpplies. It is visions of the spreading pastures and fair sleek cattle and swelling grauaries and polatical mansions of F yette and Madison and Woodford and Jessamme and Scott and B urbon that at once becken and imtel the hordes of Z Hi. Sir and of Backner The Blue Grase region is the Flysium on the possession of which they are bent with the rage not so much of pelitical animosity as of hunger and of pilage. It is the Clysten in which they burn to l. p themselves.

And, now, what stands between the Blue Grass region and one of the principal clumns of the invading hos? What Kentrekians have gone forth to meet the invader, and are now gallan'ly baring their breasts to his firree assaulter. Who of our own people have rushed to encounter the vandal horde that is pouring down upon the E yeian fiel a of the State? Who amongst us form a part of the living wall that now hurls back the myrmidons of Zollicoffer, and protects the Blue Grass region from the scourge of anhlagation? Not, alas! the men of the Bine Grass region, but the men of the Mountains. The brave mountaincers of Kenencky have dropped their pursuits and pastimes and relied to the post of danger and of defence with a real that befi's the traditional loyalty of their class. They have left their wives, their homes, their fields, their streams, their shops, their business of every description, in the charge of the old men and children, and have generously marched against the invader. The region they inhabit is comparatively deserted. The places that have known them habitual'v now know them not, though the places of their country's peril holiest instincts of nature, and we have seen hearts and willing hands—such we know can do know them well. What Macaulay in the Lay of Horatins says of the Etruscans who followed traitors from the paths of loyalty and taught lation aroused by such social communion, and Porsens to R me may be not nuftry said of to believe that vows of allegiance are of as above all the power and efficiency gained by a the mountainears of Kentn ky in this mobiler light regard as lovers' perjuries. So universally is this the case throughout this State at present that the circle where dis-flection does not exist forms an exception to the general rule.

This morning we are to meet again to complete our organization as an efficient bedy of workers in the case or loyal soldiers are fighting for. CAMP AT NOLIN, Get. 21, 1861. The other day, when I was down with General usseau's expedition, I made a thorough exemiation of the scene of the lata skirmish between a nent of the 39th Indiana and e troop of bels. It is singular what interest attaches to a ice where a battle or evan a small skirmish hes then pla e, and how greedy we are for a knowledge of of all its details' The object of interest in this case is a great eld double log honse, two ories high and very much dilapidated, standng near the wagon road, just this eide of one of the many points at which it cuts the railroad. Like spunky fellows, as they are, they returned to the ame spot that night, after discovering that our army was not advancing. This same hand c ebel horse, fifty-six in number, is always on the co. They are described by the farmers along the Thence dark shades thicken, and the vicales win r wd as well m unted, well uniformed, and armed with revolvers, sahres, and double-barrelled hotguns. > You may expect to hear of hot work out here chortly. I believe a serious fight will take place very soon. This division is beginning to feel its strength and to desire to use it. The distance between us and the rebels will be very materially shortened in a day or two, and if Buckner's men are as keen for a fight as I think they are, be cannot help but light.

Advices received last night represent the rebels as fortifying Bowling Green by every means in their power. In addition to the strong works on the kills east of the town, which they began cometime ago, they are now cutting a tranch entirely across the bend of the river north of the place, and throwing up works and planting heavy guns behind it. If w much this strengthens the they all surrendered we hout a tirbit. Besides the place will to seen at a glance by those familiar with its topography. The dam will prevent the passage of troops b low the town, tha tranch protexts the front, and the hill to the east defends that quarter. When they commenced fortifying the hill, it was rather a puzzling matter to see what they could mean. Fortifications in that direction did not appear likely to do much good. Sr. Louis, Mo , Oct. 22, 1861. GENTLEMEN: I take the liberty of transmitting you a small poem received a faw weeks since from a dearly-heloved daughter residing in Philadelphia. Though evidently not designed for publication, I think you will agree with me that its beauly, pathos, and truth will justify its ocupancy of a niche in your popular and appreciae-columns. The shade of sorrow obviously pervading the writer's spirit, caused by long-continned absence of cherished parents and the death of friends and companions, had been but recently darkened by the departure southward (owing to the unhappy ectional civil strife which is sun dering thousands of once happy congregations, households and communities) of her almost Idol

THE FEDERAL VICTORY AT FREDERICKan, Mo.-The Fredericktown correspondent of ne St. Louis Democrat gives a thrilling and no ubt faithful description of the late battle at redericktown, Mo. The belligerents were jus about equal in numbers and p si lon, and whatever was gained by the one over the other mnst be attributed to courage and skill rather than to any other cause. It was a fair stand up and fight. The writer says:

The rebel loss is not less than 100 killed, and many competent judges place it as high as 130.
Of their wounded there is but little meane of

Our soldiers were much exasperated at what assemed to them a deliberate purpose on the part of the people of Fredericktown to run then into an antuscade, by persistently and unanimously telling them a falsehood as to the movements of Thompson, for they could not hit believe that they knew where he was.

This feeling was help homed by another circumstance. There were hut few men in town, and almost every woman questioned told the etroy that the was for the linion, that her husband was for the Union, and that he had been forced to run away from home for fear the secessionists would kill him, but when the truth was ascertained, nearly every one of these men were with Thompson that day.
